The Liverpool Mercury for August 4th contains two excellent letters on the Edmonton district, one written by John B. Northcott, from South Edmonton, the other by John B. Rossell, who has been here, but is now visiting in California. Both are sensible to the point communications, and contain nothing but which is true. The more of them that find their way into our country papers the better for the district.

There is some talk of a Building Society being formed at Fort Saskatchewan for the purpose of erecting a one and half story Hall. Those who favor it, wish to get it started right away so that the fall exhibition may be held in it. The idea is to have the lower part for public purposes and make the upper part into a sort of farmers club. Nothing definite however has yet been decided on, though a number of the residents around Fort Saskatchewan have promised to take shares.

On Sunday he drove round through the Clover Bar settlement, and this afternoon was driven out to the Sturgeon. He is particularly struck on grass here, and thinks they cannot be excelled. THE NEW NORTHWEST.
The New Northwest! What potency there is behind these simple words. As yet other than they seem to peel out sharp and clear as a bell the key note of a glorious future. Never were words gifted with more real significance—with a deeper ring. The New Northwest—progress, prosperity, power. One can imagine as one utters them, the figure of a youthful goddess, rising from the centre of the harvest fields, and while waving in one hand the horn of plenty, pointing with the other to the golden grain at her feet, and calling exultantly aloud to the world to take note of the beauty of her possessions. The very term is synonymous of hope and power. The West! Is it not, has it not always been the dream of the emigrant, the theme of the poet, the cry of the oppressed? Thither, following the course of the sun has flowed the young life of Europe—the brains, the intellect, the vitality of the older empires of the New World, sapping the life blood from many a kingdom, but building up from its mass that mighty nation across the border, now in the throes of transitory depression. The New Northwest! It means to us, Manitoba, Alberta, and the vast interminable region that stretches north of us to Hudson Bay and west to the shores of the Pacific, and which alone lacks people to convert it into the wealthiest and greatest portion of the Dominion. Who is there can foretell our future, or will put a limit to our prosperity? He would be a daring prophet indeed who would try. Let us look back a bit, and see what retrospect will say. It is not so very long ago that the whole of this vast country, now dotted here and there with smiling settlements, and fields that for the first time have felt the iron nose of the plow, was known as the Northern Wilderness, or Prince Rupert's land, the territorial rights over which were granted by Charles II of England to a company of "adventurers," rights which the Hudson Bay Company conceded to the Crown in 68, for £300,000 sterling in money and one twentieth of the land in the great fertile belt south of the north branch of the Saskatchewan. All that one sees around has been accomplished since then, or more correctly speaking with the last decade. As a matter of fact, up to 1880 scarcely a sod had been turned in the whole of Manitoba and the North West Territories—to day we have considerably over a million acres in cultivation. At this rate of increase, and the way our population is being added to, when grand old 1900 rolls in, we shall scarcely know ourselves. But there is lots of room yet—no man need lack space to kick up his heels in or fire off his gun, for we barely average 1 person to the square mile. What a contrast between us and overcrowded Europe, groaning beneath the weight of taxation and over run with paupers. Only those who have seen both sides knows how much. The impressions of a traveller visiting the North West Territories for the first time are many and varied. If he hails from yonder over the sea, and has never before left the shores of his native land, he will be appalled by the magnitude of the country he is entering upon, struck dumb with astonishment at its magnificent distances and unmarred at the signs of prosperity he sees around. Like a man who has been blind all his life and suddenly awakens to sight, he will not at first be able to take in the meaning of all he sees. Unused to such sights, his eyes will wander wonderingly over the broad expanse stretched out before him. They will light upon rivers glittering in the sun, hills blue in the distance and herds, browsing on the plain, then in one quick flash the beauty of the new world he has found will be revealed to him; and the knowledge of all he has missed in the past strike him with overpowering force. The train he is on and which for nearly seven days has been steadily ploughing its way from the East to the West, comes to a halt in the middle of a magnificent valley. To the North and the South, on either side of the track rise the spurs of a range of mountains, whose topmost peaks are encrusted with a white parapet of snow, and whose sides are harked with dense masses of timber. Right ahead, crossed by a lofty trestle bridge, flows a noble stream, in the depth of whose waters hide myriads of fish, and on either bank of which rise white-capped dwellings, flanked round about by well-cared acres, golden with a crop a few more days will see gathered in. A broad roadway runs at right angles from the line to the middle of this little settlement, and the painted steeple of a church peeps out from a cluster of green trees, encircled by a rustic fence. It will soon be twilight. Over the mountains in the back ground hangs a ball of fire, the sun's last effort—the harbinger of another day's decline. Slowly and majestically it descends, dazzling you as you look at by its concentrated glare. Lower and lower it sinks, till only the rim of it is to be seen above the centremost lute. In its place a bright red springs up and flushes the heavens across the horizon, making everything beneath it look ruby in its glare, but only for a moment. With the quickness of a stage transformation scene, the red and the gold die out, and the bright night of Canada reigns there in its stead. It is a sunset long to be remembered, yet a sunset that only seems in keeping with the vastness and wonder of the region around. As the last vestige of daylight dies out, the villagers hasten towards the train, the quickness of their steps giving no evidence of the days work they have passed through. A hand shaking ensues, the colonist of the new world meets with the emigrant from the old. Though of one race they often seem of two people; for what prosperity has done for one, care and the curse of an overcharged civilization has done for the other. The contrast is indeed remarkable. Suddenly in the midst of this there is a cry of all abroad, cheery voices are heard to say "good bye," a huge peals out my country 'tis of thee, and with a gliding motion the long string of cars again start forward on their journey, and at the settlement all is quiet once more. How often have we been given such a description as this by some observant traveller, and how often have we ourselves witnessed such a scene. From the west to the east, Canada is one changing panorama. She has her Rhine, her Alps—her lakes, her prairies, and wild rugged scenery nothing can excel. It is those unhappily that live in the land that most despise its glories, To the new comer the strange and the beautiful are always apparent. Let a country be prosperous or otherwise, no matter in what quarter of the globe it may be, the inhabitants carry it in their faces. Poverty the gloom of despair—prosperity the cheerfulness of hope. So it is with us here. A stranger arriving in any part of the Northwest is at once struck with the hale and hearty tone which prevades among all classes of the people. Let it be a farmer he meets and he will tell him of the abundance of his crops, the quality of his stock, the improvements he is making on his place and how he expects to do even better next year than this. No grumbling and cursing at the uselessness of an unproductive soil, no long tale of a season's work which bore no fruit. He is satisfied and that fact speaks volumes. If a merchant he will tell of increasing trade, coming from new and perhaps distant quarter, of the rise in value of the lots he has bought, or of a branch to be established in some outside locality; while if he is a laborer he will say it won't be long before he owns a home-stand of his own. Unlike the navy of the old world a generous living is within his reach from the start. He is a man to whose future prosperity there is no limit, does he but choose to work, and use to advantage the opportunity the country holds not to him. May a colonist we have met, who, pointing to his home, embellished with every ordinary comfort, has said, "less than 5 years ago I started without a shilling." The New Northwest—there is a world of meaning in the title, for when increased facilities for transportation, in an extension of the railway system, is given to the country, and when its resources have become fully known, towns will spring up in a single tide when the prairie grass now waves, and the bustle of activity and the sound of life be heard when to-day the silence is unbroken.

THE RIVAL FARMERS.

With apologies to the principals.

Now this is a tale that is told to the wise And to just human nature right up to the skies.

It is taken from life, for it happened right here.

On the 1st day of May, in this very same year.

Two farmers they were—old timers the pair.
Both huskies and pretty well matched to a hair.

Who loved one another, I am sorry to tell,
As much as a Christian is said to love Hell.

Each held that the other was narrow and mean.

Who hadn't a thing that came up to a bear.
Yet strange to relate, when they met on the street.

They were just like the women, quite pleasant and sweet.

Their names if you want them, were Jimmy and Bill.

Both live on the road to the Fort and the mill.

Good natured the two—but of Billy's said.
He eats what would kill any other man dead.

One day in the spring time, when working away.

At sowing, or ploughing, or pitching down hay.

There came to the door of Billy's a note.
A stranger who left his horse tied in the road.

"Good day," was his greeting, unfolding a book.

"I guess you don't know me to judge by your look."

"My name is Mulvaney—the school tax is due."

"And I've come to collect it, pro rata from you."

Then he looked all around, and he praised the whole lot.

From the stock in the field, to the pig in a st.

But added, "let Jimmy's"—his neighbor next door.

He'd never seen things looking better before.

Said he, "It's a pretty fine place that you've got."

Pray tell me the figure you value the lot?
I want to assess it, your friend who lives
next door."

Value his at a thousand, away in the clear."

"A thousand?" said Jimmy, commencing to talk.

Why he hasn't a thing that is worthy of chalk.

A thousand—great Peter! the son of a hen.
If he said a thousand, why rate me at ten.

Now this is a tale that is told to the wise.
And it's just human nature right up to the skies.

here.

year.

LEGISLATIVE ASSEMBLY.

REGINA, August 17.

Oliver presented petitions from the Edmonton Electric Light & Power Co., asking that a certain agreement whereby the town of Edmonton agrees to guarantee the debentures of the company to the amount of $10,000 be confirmed. Also from the town of Edmonton, asking power to construct a tramway within the town and extending to the Calgary & Edmonton Railway station outside the town, or to authorize a company to construct such a tramway to be operated by horse or electricity.

Notice was given by Knowlton regarding an enquiry into damage by gophers; by Haines, of a bill to amend the ordinance requiring the registration of chattel mortgages with a view of securing the registration within the Territories of such mortgages be made outside the Territories; by Mowat, to amend the system of municipal taxation, somewhat on the line of the single tax theory; Dill, respecting apprentices and minors.

Haultain's bill respecting partnerships was read a first time.

On motion of Haultain—Twiss, Oliver, Davidson, Insinger, Cayley and Haultain were appointed a committee to deal with the case of the absent member for Whitewood.

Oliver's bill amending the game ordinance was read a first time.

Nell's bill respecting infectious diseases of domestic animals and respecting noxious weeds were read a first time.

On the motion, for second reading of the bill respecting prairie and forest fires, Haultain explained that the bill provided a minimum penalty, the amount of which he had left to be fixed by the house. It had come to his notice that in many cases merely nominal fines had been imposed in cases of infractions of the law. He thought that considering the vast destruction wrought every year by prairie fires, that whether such fires were the result of negligence or intent, the punishment should be sufficient to secure respect and attention to such an important law. The other amending provision of the bill was to constitute all police constables fire guardians.

This was at the suggestion of the police commissioner. Hitherto some constables were guardians and others were not. If all were constituted fire guardians there would be every assurance that the constable who happened to be on duty would have full power to act.

Insinger and Betts thought half the fine should go to the informer in case of infractions of the law. The latter said that in Saskatchewan there had not been a single conviction under the fire ordinance in six years. Although the principle of giving half the fine to the informer might be distasteful, he thought the results would be beneficial.

Lineham asked if the provisions could not be extended to ensure.

Cayley and Davidson spoke of the necessity of dealing more forcibly with railways firing the country. The former suggested that the bill should be referred to a standing or special committee for the addition of something in that direction. The latter mentioned that the railway companies avoided liability under the present ordinance by a judgment of the Supreme Court, which held that as the sparks from the locomotive which fired the prairie were kindled in the engine and not in the open air, their kindlings was not an offence under the ordinance.

Haultain objected to the general principle of giving the informer half the fine, but though the practice might be adopted under this ordinance with advantage. He asked that the bill be referred to the committee on agriculture.

Haultain and Nell moved that Cayley, Betts, Oliver, Nell and Knowlton be a committee to prepare a reply to the Lieutenant-Governor's speech.

House adjourned.

All the members present at to-day's session except McKay, Meyers, Clink-skill and Mitchell, who are meeting the minister of the interior in Saskatchewan. The minister will arrive from Battledore on Monday next.

REGINA, August 22.

Cayley from standing orders committee recommended that the petitions from the Edmonton Electric light company and the town of Edmonton for power to construct a tramway be received.

Betts gave notice for a return of employees in connection with Northwest exhibit at Chicago with statement of salaries and travelling expenses.

Insinger gave notice of a bill to repeal the ordinance of last session granting exemption from school taxation to the Manitoba Northwestern railway on condition of completing their line to Prince Albert.

Page moved the addition of two names to the agriculture committee.

Knowlton moved that the Committee on agriculture enquire into and report on damage by gophers.

Five bills of which notice had been given received their first reading.

Oliver's bill amending the game ordinance was read a second time and referred at once to the committee of the whole.

Section one to close the shooting season for prairie chicken on December 1st instead of January 1st was carried.

Section two, providing that in Northern Alberta the duck shooting season should commence on August 15th was considered.

Oliver said that the date had been shifted backward and forward between the 15th of August and 1st of September ever since the game law had been framed. The reason was that the conditions in the north and in the south differed materially and also one year differed from another. Members had voted from time to time according to the conditions of their particular districts and according to the season during which they voted. The present date was an injustice to the sportsmen of Northern Alberta as it deprived them of two weeks of legitimate shooting for no one's benefit. As a consequence of the feeling that the ordinance was unjust its provisions were not being enforced and instead of the game being protected to a reasonable date it was not being protected at all. With a view of securing the co-operation of sportsmen in a fair amount of game protection the bill proposed to give Northern Alberta, where the duck season was earlier than in other parts of the Territories the 15th of August, and allow the general date to remain at the 1st of September.

Wilkins moved an amendment that the date be August 20th for the whole territories. The drawing of a dividing line would occasion great complications along that line and it would be better to have a compromise date for the whole Territories. A prominent sportsman in Regina had suggested the 20th of August, and although that was later than was desirable in his district, for the sake of securing a general and permanent date he would agree to it.

A long and hot discussion followed, during which Cayley moved that the date be the 25th of August, but afterwards withdrew the motion and substituted the 23rd as midway between the 15th of August and the first of September, which was carried.

Haultain moved that the shooting season for snipe, plovers and sandpipers be from August 1st to January 1st as in Manitoba, which was carried.

Section 3, providing that half the fine should go to the informer if he demanded it, brought out some discussion.

Insinger thought the whole fine should go to the informer.

Haultain, Cayley and Brett had objected to the principle of giving informers half the fine but thought in this case it would have a beneficial effect, Cayley pointed out odium was only properly attached to the work of an informer when the informer was a partner in the offence. The citizen who sought to secure the enforcement of the law by bringing offenders to justice was an informer in the proper acceptation of the word. There was no reason why he should take such action at his own expense if he did not wish to do so.

The section was carried.

Page moved for a correction of a clerical error in the section of the ordinance of last session providing that non residents of the Territories should pay a license fee of $5.

Betts moved that the section to charge the non-residents a license fee struck out. It was a hardship that a person visiting friends in the Territories or one of the many land prospectors could not enjoy a day's shooting without taking out a license.

Insinger and Brett supported.

Davidson and Page pointed out the fact that pot-hunters from Manitoba came into the Territories every fall to slaughter game. The license was a restriction on such people and should be enforced.

Betts amendment was lost.
Magrath moved that a game warden should be appointed in whose name prosecutions should be entered. If the assembly passed ordinances they should provide full means for their enforcement.

Haultain and Cayley objected on the ground of expense.

Amendment lost.

As other amendments were expected the bill was allowed to remain in committee.

House adjourned.
